Excerpt from A Pleasaunt Comedie of the Life of Will Shakspeare, Player of the Globe Theater on the Bankside Shakspeare. O soul of mine, thou forest in strange ways On thy mind-journey; meadows sunlit bright Thou traversest where variant flow rs delight And lure aside; in grey mysterious haze Thou wand rest phantom-led thro many a maze; Thou bravest rivers rolling with swift might, Lingerest on little hills of graceful height; In stately woods thou dreamest happy days: Until a lonely mountain-top is won, Font of the streams and mother of the vales, Whose verdant slope all Elfland plays upon, On whose fair brow Truth s star faints not nor pales, Whence in the noontide eagles seek the sun, Where in the moonlight sob the nightingales.
