When Mr. P. O Connor was in the witness-box he told Mr. Ronan, with an amusing expression of surprise and compassion, that they were about three centuries old. For, whatever else it might be, the inquiry was an incident of the Parnell Movement ; and Mr. Ronan, conscious that he must begin his cross-examination somehow, but feeling a little fluttered, had just asked the historian of the movement to tell him when the movement began. Sir Henry James, in an address which even his opponents frankly admire for its ability and ingenuity, and a courtesy and considerateness that render it all the more formidable - Sir Henry James traces the origin of the inquiry to a speech of Mr. Parnell s, made during the debate on the Address, February, 1887, and warning the Government against the dangers of Coercion. But if a date must be chosen, why not make it thirty-five minutes to one of the morning of the 7th of June, 1886, when the House of Commons saw one of the most impressive scenes in its great history; when it had just reached the parting of the ways, and each had chosen his path; and when, with an impulse characteristic of their race, the solid mass of Irish Nationalists sprang up with three cheers for the Grand Old Man, in the hour of his defeat. The inquiry has been an expression of a general and far-reaching consequence - the re-grouping of men, in accordance with their choice...
