Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Transactions of the Ninth Annual Meeting of the American Gastro-Enterological Association: 1906 The medical treatment of disorders of digestion has made enormous strides during the past twenty-five years. The chief factor in this progress has been the stomach tube. By means of the tube, diagnosis has been improved and thereby the adaptation of the treatment to the existing pathological conditions has been made possible. Other important factors have been the advance in our physiological conceptions of digestion and the facts revealed by abdominal surgery. Unfortunately this knowledge and power have not become the common property of the profession. The general practitioners have not kept pace with the advances in this field of work. The surgeons, for the most part, have remained in ignorance of what can be accomplished by the proper treatment of digestive disorders. The cause of this state of affairs is not hard to find. The medical colleges up to within the past few years have not established special chairs in this department of practice. The advances in gastroenterology have appeared to the older practitioners to be of a too technical character for them to master.
