

Everybody Ought to be Rich: The Life and Times of John J. Raskob, Capitalist (Hardback)

By Professor of History David Farber

Oxford University Press Inc, United States, 2013. Hardback. Book Condition: New. 236 x 163 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book. John Raskob is not a name that looms large but his greatest building casts a shadow on us every day. Financier of the Empire State Building, Raskob was a self-made businessman who worked for DuPont and for GM and famously invented with the idea for consumer credit, which he first offered to individual car buyers (GMAC). A friend of New York Governor Al Smith, Raskob became active in New York politics and ran the Democratic National Committee and Smith's campaign for the presidency. He invested his own fortune heavily in the Empire State Building, built at the height of the Great Depression. A colorful figure, Raskob's life evokes the roaring twenties, the Catholic elite, the boardrooms of America's biggest corporations, and the rags-to-riches tale that is central to the American dream. His most famous interview was entitled Everybody Ought to Be Rich in Ladies Home Journal in August 1929-on the eve of the stock market crash-and his personal achievement of such extraordinary wealth and power highlight just how far he came traveled from a teenage candy...

DOWNLOAD PDF

READ ONLINE

[8.47 MB]

Reviews

This pdf is so gripping and exciting. I actually have gone through and I am confident that I will go through once again in the future. I discovered this publication from my dad and I advised this ebook to discover.

-- Mr. Elwin McGlynn Jr.

A whole new eBook with a new point of view. It can be really fascinating through studying period of time. I am delighted to explain how this is actually the finest book I have read through during my very own life and could be the best publication for at any time.

-- Scarlett Stracke